How they may differ about other details, it does not natter. The pledge issue should be regorded as settled to the satisfaction of the most jealous watcher of public interests.

A POLICE CCURT DUE!.

There is a distinct suggestion of burlesque stage in the story of the enter at the horse show between Col BERT KEVILLE, of several Washington, faryland and New York clubs, and SAMUEL S. HOWLAND, also a cluban of high degree. "I will strike on real hard, there!" Col. EVILLE might have exclaimed, as he cought his open hand (he says) fill men his umbrella (Mr. HowLand says) to ar on the jaw (he says) or head (Mr. dign't exclaim. He only struck and let it go at that. Or, rather, he was willing to let it go at that if Mr. Howland was.

He meant to convey a deadly insult in his blow, and felt that he bad done so.

Through the persuasion of his friends Mr. HowLand was induced to take the matter to the police court. Of course also. This is considered in its knightly bearing far below the process of shooting one's fee in hot or cold blood on the field of honor. But it is much pleasanter oneself. A duel under the criminal code may yet, however, bring results as loudly redounding to the satis faction of either party with a grievance, as if the affair were under the code of the duello. And the dear public, having a fairly good story out of it all anyway, will spare, with good grace, a scene of blood shed. Now up and at it! And let there be no sparing of the pricking points of the revised statutes.
